Honoring our heroes

Your guide to celebrating Veterans Day in Boston this weekend.

MATT JUUL

On Sunday, Boston will join the rest of the country in honoring our military veterans with parades, specials and so much more. Here's our guide to celebrating Veterans Day 2018 in the Hub this weekend.

1. Watch the parades

Each year, a pair of parades are held in Boston in honor of Veterans Day. The first is a more traditional parade, which will kick off at 1 p.m. on Sunday and will march around Boylston and Tremont streets. The second is geared toward the peace aspect of Armistice Day, which is also on Nov. 11 and pays tribute to the armistice signed between Germany and the Allies of World War I. Dubbed the Veterans

Day Parade for Peace, the second parade follows the same route as the first parade, but will continue on to Faneuil Hall for a special event featuring poetry, songs and more. Nov. 11, 1 p.m., various locations

2. Take a cruise

Veterans and active duty military members can celebrate Veterans Day 2018 with a cruise around the Boston Harbor Islands, which highlights the region's military area. Saturday's festivities will include tours of Fort Warren, a trip to Georges Island, a flag-raising ceremony and even activities for the kids. The cruise is free for veterans and military members, while others can join in on the fun for $10. Nov. 10, 11 a.m.-3 p.m., Georges Island, boston-harborislands.org

3. Honor the women of WWII

Celebrate Veterans Day 2018 by heading over to the International Museum of World War II. The Natick museum has a special exhibit currently on display called "Women in WWII: On the Home Fronts and the Battlefronts," which explores how women took on roles traditionally held by men when they were sent off to war. The exhibit features more than 100 artifacts, including a Saturday Evening Post with a portrayal of Rosie the Riveter on the cover by Norman Rockwell. 8 Mercer Rd., Natick, museumofworldwarII.org

4. Explore the outdoors with The Trustees

In celebration of Veterans Day, The Trustees is offering free admission for all of its properties to veterans, as well as active duty and retired military members, plus their families. Guests will get a chance to explore the group's various outdoor destinations and tour the Trustees historic houses. Nov. 11-12, various locations, thetrustees.org

5. Hit the lanes

Kings Dining and Entertainment is giving back by offering free games of bowling and shoe rentals to all veterans, active, and reserve military members. The promotion kicks off on Friday and will be available through Monday. Nov. 9-12, various locations, kings-de.com

Lewis Black on Donald Trump and delusional Bostonians

The comic returns to the Hub for two nights of laughs this weekend.

MATT JULI

A lot of people are angry about politics these days, but not many are able to express their rage in a way that can cause uproarious laughter quite like Lewis Black.

The fan-favorite comedian and frequent "Daily Show" guest brings the laughs back to Boston this weekend when his "Joke's on Us" tour stops for a two-night stay at the Shubert Theatre. Black tells Metro that he has a lot of love for the Hub, as the comic used to do stand-up shows at the now-closed Catch a Rising Star club in Cambridge when he wasn't performing in Chris Durang's "Media Amok" at the American Repertory Theater back in the early '90s.

"I got to know a lot of the comics there and watched a lot of the comics," says Black. "It had a big effect on my work, [as did] the Boston audience."

While Black always enjoys taking a trip back to Boston, he does have one complaint when it comes to the locals. In particular, he can't stand their "delusional" beliefs about the weather.

"I was there four months and I saw the sun twice," Black says of his time living in Boston. "There's a delusion that all Bostonians suffer from where they go, 'Oh, we're having the same weather today that you're having in New York,' because I would be yelling about the weather."

"I'd go get a newspaper and go, 'No, you see this? See, this is what's happening in New York. It's five degrees warmer and it's sunny. OK? There's sun there today and we've not seen the sun here in four days,'" he adds. "So stop believing that you have the same weather as other people. You don't. You have the same weather, probably, today as London, England, a-hole."

Don't expect the weather to be the topic du jour when Black returns this weekend, though. As expected, the 70-year-old star will offer up his hilarious thoughts on what's going on in the world of politics, whether it's Brett Kavanaugh or the man in the Oval Office.

Although Black has plenty to say about Donald Trump, he insists that his latest tour isn't all about the president, despite what his critics believe.

"I've bashed every president, so it becomes absurd to listen to that nonsense," says Black. "I don't really spend a lot of time bashing him. It's mostly about how he's bashing us."

Fans can also expect Black to go off the rails a bit during the "Rant Is Due" portion of the show, where he riffs on whatever topic comes to mind. Black recalls a recent performance where he basically, well, blacked out during a particularly fiery rant.

"I went off for six minutes, I just went nuts," admits Black. "I don't even know what I said. None of it is prepared."

How #MeToo, Russian hacking changed 'The Girl in the Spider's Web'

Fede Alvarez believes the response to Claire

Foy's character will say a lot about society. GREGORY WAKEMAN

"The Girl in the Spider's Web" is a biting modern movie, as its protagonists use hacking, computers and technology in a detailed, authentic and some might even say cold fashion to aid their efforts.

Fede Alvarez's soft-reboot of the franchise, which sees Claire Foy taking on the role of computer hacker Lisbeth Salander, who's trying to get her hands on an NSA program that has access to the world's nuclear codes before spies and criminals can, embraces these unique attributes.

While other franchises and movies usually struggle to integrate technology, either going too futuristic and unrealistic or changing their characters to be either technophobes or technophiles depending on the scene, "The Girl in the Spider's Web" implements it in a consistent, concise and self-explanatory fashion.

But while "Spider's Web" taps into the zeitgeist in this manner, Alvarez tells Metro that there were two social movements that occurred during pre-production that impacted and changed the film.

"Something strange that happened during this movie, which was linked to the film, was that by the time we were done with the script and were already starting to cast that everybody was talking about the #MeToo movement, which for a movie starting with her hanging a guy upside down, was quite interesting," says Alvarez. "And the other was hacking. Hacking, hacking, hacking, which was everywhere. Hacking, a few years ago, it felt like a movie thing. But suddenly it felt like it was in everybody's news and agenda."

"It was really strange how those things suddenly became front and center when we started to make the movie," he adds. "Our film isn't a reaction to that, because we can't make movies that fast. We were already making it."

But how did the mainstream media's coverage of #MeToo and hackers influence the film at all?

"It changed in a good way. The hacker part of it was just giving us

Claire Foy takes on the role of Lisbeth Salander in "The Girl in the Spider's Web." ALL PHOTOS NADIA KUEER information and insight into this world that we didn't have before," admits Alvarez. "Suddenly, we are reading about this shadow broker's hacking into the NSA and stealing one of their most important tools. We could read about how that happened and then portray it more realistically in the film. Things like that created greater insight and information we didn't have."

"For #MeToo, the greatest part was really be responsible as a male director portraying a female icon on the screen. The way I did it was by really, really listening to my female lead," he adds. "To really listen to her. To listen to her wishes and her decisions about how she looks and act. Making sure scene and moments on screen weren't exploitative and we didn't objectify her, or fall into any traps."

Alvarez goes on to call star Foy "so smart, and us being so militant with this approach and her portrayal, we were able to make sure that we stayed true to her idea of the character and not a male fantasy or subjectivity."

"That is something that really comes through in the film, as so many choices are based on Claire's choices and sensitivity. We'll see how the audience reacts to it," says Alvarez. "That will tell us a lot about society. Let's see if they really want to see that or if they expect a young girl that sleeps with the guy or is half naked every other scene."

"The Girl in the Spider's Web" opens in theaters Nov. 9.

'Room 104' finally gave Mark Duplass the chance to work with Mahershala Ali

The HBO anthology returns for a second season this week.

ANDREW HUSBAND

Technically, Mark Duplass and Mahershala Ali have worked together. Both men provided their voice over talents to the Amazon series "Comrade Detective," which employed a large English-speaking cast to dub a purposefully shot (and fictional) '80s Romanian TV show.

That's obviously a technicality, of course, because Duplass and Ali weren't even in the room together when they recorded their lines. And as the former explains, the opportunity for them to finally work together, face to face, presented itself with season 2 of he and his brother's HBO anthology series "Room 104."

A quick recap: "Room 104" is about a single room in a nondescript hotel somewhere in America, and all the different people who stay in it. Sometimes the stories it tells are purely comedic or dramatic, sometimes it tells tales of surreal horror and science fiction-esque complexity. In either case, "Room 104" has afforded the Duplass Brothers the chance to work with some pretty amazing people, including Ali.

"I've had a longstanding mutual admiration and friendship with Mahershala, but I'm super busy and he is super, super busy, so we've never been able to find the time to make anything together," says Duplass. "'Room 104' provided the perfect opportunity, so I told him, 'Come up with a character you like and I'll write you a story.'"

Ali came up with an idea for a character in a situation and gave it to Duplass, who in turn transformed it into an episode.

"I wrote him a script overnight and sent it to him. He loved it, so I said, 'Give me two days when you're free in this three-month window and we'll shoot it together in two days.' He did. It was the perfect way for us to collaborate creatively together in a short time frame. Otherwise, I don't think there would have been any time for us to set aside 12 weeks to make a much longer show or movie together. It's just not feasible right now."

Ali's episode concerns his pool shark character's efforts to persuade his cousin to stay in the hustling game while they're holed up in the room. Needless to say, their familial conversation isn't going to be too friendly.

But that's the nature of "Room 104," in which every episode is different and, fan theories notwithstanding, no connections aside from the room itself exist between them.

"We were pleasantly surprised that people were taking delight in guessing what was going on," Duplass says of he and his brother's reaction to all the theories. "I've never considered myself a maker of grand mysteries. I'm more of a people, feelings and faces kind of filmmaker. But to have people theorizing about it like they were was really fun for us."

Trump fires Sessions, vows to fight Democrats if they launch probes Sessions' chief of staff Matthew Whitaker was named acting AG.

President Donald Trump on Wednesday forced out Attorney General Jeff Sessions a day after congressional elections, and vowed to fight if the U.S. House of Representatives' new Democratic majority launches probes into his administration.

Sessions — an early Trump supporter who ran afoul of the president by recusing himself from an investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 White House campaign — said in a letter to Trump that he had submitted his resignation “at your request.”

The 71-year-old former U.S. senator was informed on Wednesday morning by White House Chief of Staff John Kelly in a phone call that it was time to go, said an aide who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Sessions' departure was the first in what could be a string of high-profile exits as Trump reshapes his team to gird for his own 2020 re-election effort. The Republican president named Sessions' chief of staff, Matthew Whitaker, as acting attorney general and said he would nominate someone for the job soon.

Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein was visiting the White House on Wednesday afternoon for what was described by an administration official as a regularly scheduled meeting.

Nancy Pelosi, the House Democratic leader who could be the next speaker, called Sessions' ouster a “blatant attempt” to undermine the Russia probe and urged Whitaker to recuse himself from any involvement in a statement posted to Twitter.

During a combative news conference in which he tangled with reporters, Trump trumpeted his role in Republican gains in Tuesday's midterm congressional elections, and warned of a “warlike posture” in D.C. if Democrats investigated him.

Democrats will now head House committees that can probe the president's tax returns, which he has refused to turn over since he was a candidate, as well as possible business conflicts of interest and any links between his 2016 campaign and Russia, a matter being investigated by U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller.

Trump said he could fire Mueller if he wanted but was hesitant to take that step. “I could fire everybody right now, but I don't want to stop it, because politically I don't like stopping it,” he said.

Moscow denies meddling. Trump, calling the Mueller probe a witch hunt, has repeatedly said there was no collusion.

Trump was buoyed Wednesday by victories that added to the Republican majority in the Senate, telling reporters at the White House that the gains outweighed the Democrats' House takeover. He added that he was willing to work with Democrats on key priorities but felt any House investigations of his administration would hurt prospects for bipartisanship.

“They can play that game, but we can play it better,” Trump said of the possibility of Democratic investigations. REUTERS

THE WORST SCANDAL

The families of the Altar boys and girls are lying that the priest abused more than 1,000,000 altar boys. Our Heavenly God in the year 2002, sent a message to the pope and all the leaders in the Catholic church, not to put altar boys and girls in the church, in the altar. Don't pay any money to families of the altar boys and girls who complain about the priest abusing them, but build a big jail to punish the priest who abused boys and girls. Now, there is a rumor around of many schools between themselves, you need money, go to the church and talk to the bishop, the priest abused you right away they pay you $50,000 or $100,000 and they tell you don't talk anymore to no one about this case. See you later. Now this is why so many churches are closing, to pay money to the altar boys and girls. We know 3 boys who told my friend we got a big portion of money from the church those 3 boys got into depression and committed suicide. Our heavenly father is going to punish those families of the altar boys they can go to hell for lying about the priest. This trouble happened in the church because the leaders don't listen to the big box our heavenly father. He sent messages over seas for many years and no one listened.

THE CHARGE OF THE DEMOCRATS

could come to a screeching halt if it does not reasonably satisfy Democratic demands.

And what might the Dems start? Investigations. Lots of them. With majority control, they can launch probes into spending, travel, secret meetings and more by member of the Trump administration. They can dig into those conflict-of-interest questions swirling around Trump's political influence and his family's business empire. They can even give political cover to the Russia investigation, knowing if Trump tries to shut it down, they now have the strength to legitimately push for impeachment.

Trump, as you might expect, has already met this political threat with one of his own, tweeting: "If the Democrats think they are going to waste Taxpayer Money investigating us at the House level, then we will likewise be forced to consider investigating them for all of the leaks of Classified Information, and much else, at the Senate level. Two can play that game!"

But that's the point, isn't it? Last week, for practical purposes only one party was on the playing field. Now there truly are two. And while the Democrats are still the underdogs, their old guard has been here before and knows how to make a lot out of even a little political power. That's a game changer, even if it's not the "blue wave" they wanted.

Just as I predicted, the midterm election did not produce the "blue wave" Democrats hoped for. While they took control of the U.S. House of Representatives and scored some important wins in state governments, the Republicans also strengthened their hold on the Senate and racked up their own victories back home. Neither party came out with a clear nationwide mandate, and the war of political polarity rages on.

But Democrats decidedly have something to celebrate, because they gained two critical powers in the House — the power to stop, and the power to start. Their newfound majority can stop President Donald Trump's entire legislative agenda. All that Republican chatter about a GOP version of immigration reform, new tax cuts, trade deals, and infrastructure investments

Defiant Trump blames media, fellow Republicans for House losses

The day after his party lost its lock on Congress, President Donald Trump walked into a White House press conference ready for political combat, name-checking Republicans whom he blamed for losing their seats and lashing out at reporters who challenged his assertions.

Republicans lost control of the House of Representatives to Democrats, but Trump shrugged that off, casting Tuesday's congressional election results as "very close to complete victory" for Republicans and saying he could negotiate easier on some issues with Democrats, anyway. Republicans kept their Senate majority.

Trump briefly sought to strike a statesmanlike tone in his first public remarks after the loss, praising House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi for her hard work and envisioning "a beautiful, bipartisan type of situation" on infrastructure investments and health care.

But his news conference, which stretched close to 90 minutes, quickly turned raucous when some reporters pushed him on whether his campaign rhetoric on migrants from central America was divisive — and on developments in a federal investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election and any coordination between Moscow and the Trump campaign.

Trump aggressively pushed back.

"CNN should be ashamed of itself, having you working for them," Trump told CNN correspondent Jim Acosta, who wrestled with a White House staffer who forcibly pulled the microphone from his hands.

"You are a rude, terrible person," Trump told Acosta.

To PBS NewsHour's

Yamiche Alcindor, who asked him about white nationalists emboldened by Trump labeling himself a "nationalist," Trump said he was insulted.

"That's such a racist question," said Trump, who has made accusations of unfair coverage from the media a staple on the campaign trail.

Even as Trump mused about working with Democrats, he was quick to promise a "warlike posture" if the Democratic-controlled House opens investigations into his administration.

"They can play that game, but we can play it better," he said.

Trump took credit for his Republican Party's gains in the Senate, casting those results in historic terms. He said he "stopped the blue wave," noting nine of 11 candidates whom he stumped for in the final week of the race won.

But he expressed frustration that 43 House Republicans retired rather than seek re-election, saying that hurt his party.

He took a jab at "grandstanding" congressmen from his own party whom he said would have made it difficult to get legislation through the House, had Republicans eked out a narrow win in the chamber.

Trump took the rare step of mocking Republican candidates who kept their distance from him during the campaign because of concerns that his divisive messages on immigration would turn off voters — but lost anyway.

He singled out Peter Roskam of Illinois, Erik Paulsen of Minnesota, John Faso of New York, and New Jersey senate candidate Bob Hugin.

"Carlos Curbelo, Mike Coffman — too bad, Mike," he said, referring to losing Republican congressmen in Florida and Colorado contests. REUTERS

Could Earth make contact with alien life via a laser beam shot into space?

MIT study suggests beaming high-powered laser into space could attract alien life

A laser beam could be a "planetary porch light," calling to alien life across our galaxy.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Are aliens real? Harvard astronomers suggested a recent unidentified object may have been an alien spacecraft investigating Earth, and now, an MIT study proposes using a high-powered laser as a "beacon" to attract alien life, if it does exist in our galaxy.

The MIT research, recently published in The Astrophysical Journal, suggests that a 1- to 2-megawatt laser focused through a large (about 98 to 148 feet) telescope could act as a "planetary porch light," calling out to potential alien life as far as 20,000 light years away.

"This would be a challenging project, but not an impossible one," said author James Clark in a statement. "The kinds of lasers and telescopes that are being built today can produce a detectable signal, so that an astronomer could take one look at our star and immediately see something unusual about its spectrum. I don't know if intelligent creatures around the sun would be their first guess, but it would certainly attract further attention."

The laser beam would stand out from the sun's energy, according to Clark, and could be used to send brief messages through "pulses," similar to Morse code.

Of course, there has to be alien life to receive the signal. Around TRAPPIST-1b, a star approximately 40 light years away, there are three exoplanets (planets that orbit a star outside of our solar system) which are potentially habitable.

The laser beacon to alien life should be built upon a mountain, according to Clark, in order to minimize the amount of atmosphere the beam would have to break through before shining into space.

'Oumuamua is the first known interstellar object to enter our solar system, and it was discovered in October 2017 by a telescope system in Hawaii. After research found that 'Oumuamua was not a comet, many took to Twitter to share their thoughts that this object was actually a sign of alien life.

In a new paper, researchers at the Harvard Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics brought up that possibility.

"Oumuamua may be a fully operational probe sent intentionally to Earth vicinity by an alien civilization."

Harvard researchers

The Harvard researchers suggest 'Oumuamua could be a solar sail, "floating in interstellar space as a debris from an advanced technological equipment."

Other astronomy experts, however, disagree. Alan Jackson of the Centre for Planetary Sciences at the University of Toronto Scarborough published a paper in March suggesting 'Oumuamua looks like an asteroid or comet, not a solar sail, originating from a system with two stars.

Viagra's Sex Pill Monopoly Is Over

Since 1993, three brands have dominated the men's sexual performance market. Now there's a fourth, Vesele. And the difference is amazing...

SAN DIEGO — A new sex pill is set to take the spotlight with the Viagra patent about to expire. Since it's not a drug, it's something very different, it won't require a prescription and is priced just under a $1 a dose.

The new pill called Vesele is part of a new class of performance enhancers for men, which work on the body and mind, supporting firmer and harder erections.

Formulated with a special compound known as a blood flow booster, Vesele can transport its active ingredients in higher levels into the blood stream, where it begins to work.

The patent pending ingredient increases nitric oxide production, initiating a process known as vasodilation, which causes arteries and vessels throughout the body to relax. This allows blood to flow to penis and genitals, promoting stronger, harder erection which last longer.

But what makes Vesele so remarkable, and what these other sex pills can't do, is that a small portion of this blood flows to the brain, which creates feelings of intense arousal. In laymen's terms, users become incredibly excited and turned on.

This is why the makers of Vesele say their pill has worked so effectively in human clinical use survey trial. It increases blood flow to the two most important organs for great sex, the penis and the brain.

The Brain Erection Connection

Until now, medical researchers did not fully understand the brain-erection connection. It has now been made clearer with the data backing Vesele. When both are supplied with a constant blood flow, men are harder and firmer for longer...and have higher sex drives.

"Most of the research and treatment methods for men's sexual failures have focused on physiological factors and have neglected the emotional ones. For the leading sex drugs to work, like Cialis and Viagra, you need visual stimulation" explains Dr. Henry Esber, from the company who created Vesele.

According to research published by the National Institute of Health, 50% of men taking these drugs stop responding or can't tolerate their side effects... and on top of that they spend $25 per pill and it doesn't even work half the time.

This is what makes Vesele so different. It provides the blood stream with nitric oxide which cause arteries to relax. The patented accelerator speeds up this process even more.

The result is an increase in hardness and maintenance and frequent sex when it is taken daily.

Great Sex At Any Age

With the conclusion of latest human clinical use survey trial, Vesele is now being offering in the US. And regardless of the market, its sales are exploding.

Men across the country are eager to get their hands on the new pill and according to the research, they should be.

In the trial above, men taking Vesele saw a staggering 45.1% improvement in erection hardness from baseline over a four-month period. Their erections also lasted twice as long.

These same men also experienced an astounding 27% increase in the desire for sex (libido/sex drive) and an even greater improvement in overall satisfaction and ability to satisfy their partners.

Higher Absorption into the Blood Stream

Vesele is made up of three specialized ingredients: two vasodilators and a patented absorption enhancer often called an accelerator. The FDA considers all to be safe.

Research shows that with age, many men struggle to produce an erection firm enough for penetration.

And although there are many theories as to why this happens (including a loss in testosterone) one thing is certain, inadequate blood flow is virtually always to blame. That's why sex drug manufacturers focus on blood flow, it makes your erection hard.

But what's more surprising, and what these manufacturers have failed to consider, is that lack of blood flow can also kill your sex drive. That's because blood supplies energy for the brain. This energy is required for creating brainwaves that cause excitability and arousal.

Studies show that nitric oxide stimulates the entire cardiovascular system, including the arteries that lead to both the brain and penis. The higher concentration of the ingredients in Vesele combined with the accelerator ensures that this process continues to work over time.

The sexual benefits of Vesele will start to show as its ingredients build up in the system over time. This is why many men take it every single day.

The Same Study Shows Positive Effects on Women

In the same outstanding study referenced throughout, Vesele was also shown to have a surprising effect on women too. That's because Expiring Patent Opens the Door to a New Sex Pill: Vesele is a new pill that cost just $1 a dose and does not require a prescription. It works on both body and mind to increase arousal and erection hardness.

the same arteries and vessels that carry blood and oxygen to the brain and genitals are the same in men and women.

"In our study, women taking Vesele saw a stunning 23.7% and 20.4% improvement in arousal and sex drive over baseline.

You can imagine why some couples are taking Vesele together. Everything feels better. Everything works better. Everyone performs better.

A New Frontier of Non-Prescription Sex Pills

With daily use, Vesele is helping men (and women) with their sex lives and overcome sexual lets downs without side effect or expense.

Through a patented accelerate, Vesele's formula is better absorbed into the bloodstream, resulting in remarkable improvements in erection firmness and hardness.

And with better blood flow, users also experienced sexual feeling they haven't felt in years.

Where to Find Vesele

This is the official release of Vesele in Massachusetts. As such, the company is offering a special discounted supply to any reader who calls within the next 48 hours.

A special hotline number and discounted pricing has been created for all Massachusetts residents. Discounts will be available starting today at 6:00AM and will automatically be applied to all callers.

Plan a fall Nantucket trip

The island is the perfect place to visit this autumn. KATELYN CHIEF

The picturesque cobblestone streets of Nantucket are freshly painted with fall leaves.

Now is the time to plan your trip to the charming New England island. If you thought the whale-shaped isle was beautiful in the summer, you haven't seen it in autumn—there's plenty to do!

Fall on the waterfront

November marks the start of Nantucket Bay scallop season. These delicious scallops (and the dishes they inspire) are curated by the chilly waters of the Nantucket Sound and are collected from the island's native inshore eelgrass. Stop by two well-known island restaurants, Brant Point Grill or Topper's to give 'em a shuck and a taste.

Just because autumn has made its way back to the tiny island doesn't mean the lobsters have gone on a holiday. Guests who want to take their taste buds to the sea can board The Wauwinet Lady each Tuesday and Thursday with Captain Rob for a hands-on-lobstering experience. Fall on the island is truly an autumn shell-ebration.

Avid fishermen (and women) can try their hand at surfcasting, where lines are cast directly from the shores of Atlantic Hotel's private beach. Complimentary lessons are provided on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

ACK for the holidays

The White Elephant's Brandt Point Grill hosts its annual Thanksgiving Buffet on Nov. 22 from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Here, foodies can fill their plates while enjoying the coastal views out onto the restaurant's lawn. All of the traditional fixings such as turkey, mashed potatoes and stuffing will be served. Coastal dishes such as clam chowder and a plentiful raw bar will be on the Thanksgiving menu too.

Menus are priced at $85 for adults and $35 for children 4-12; children under 4 dine for free.

The highly awaited

Nantucket Christmas Stroll will commence from Nov. 30 to Dec. 2. This year will mark the 45th anniversary of the Christmas Stroll where downtown Nantucket is transformed into a winter-holiday utopia. Shoppers (and photographers) will see hundreds of 7-foot Christmas trees lining the cobblestone streets as well as costumed carolers, live performances on Maine Street, treats at the local shops and also Santa Claus at the historic Jared Coffin house. Now, doesn't that all sound all so very merry?

OK, you're ready to book your ticket to ACK this new season ... where to stay? The cool thing about the cooler island temperature is that rates and room prices drop too at the Nantucket Island Resorts. Pats set to face Titans in Tennessee

The Patriots will see plenty of familiar faces in Week 10.

JULIAN EDLOW
sports@metro.us

After a concerning 1-2 start, the Patriots have ripped off six straight victories to get to 7-2 with a trip to Tennessee as their last stop before the bye week. Following a three-game losing streak, the Titans battled their way back to 4-4 with a win on Monday night in Dallas, fueled by a season-high 28 points.

Here are three things to watch for when the Patriots and Titans clash on Sunday (1 p.m., CBS).

Taking advantage of familiar faces

Patriots fans will recognize plenty of faces on the Tennessee sideline, headlined by former linebacker Mike Vrabel who is in his first year as a head coach in the NFL. Two members of New England's 2017 roster signed lucrative deals with the Titans in the offseason as well in RB Dion Lewis and CB Malcolm Butler.

While Bill Belichick might try to get into the mind of Vrabel, or the defense perhaps can key in on tiny things to stop Lewis, Butler is undoubtedly the player the Patriots will look to take advantage of. While we still are yet to learn the exact details, we all remember the beef Belichick and Butler had during Super Bowl week against the Eagles, which led to Butler getting benched for the entire game (aside from a lone snap on special teams).

Bad blood aside, the more important reason Butler will likely be targeted so much by the New England offense is because he's flat-out been one of the worst defensive backs in football this season. Butler's been sloppy in coverage all year, often letting up back-breaking plays for the Tennessee defense. That was on display on the national stage Monday night, as Butler let up two touchdowns to Cowboy receivers as a result of embarrassing blown coverages. The Patriots are well aware of this, and will look to take full advantage.

Monitoring the backfield and injuries

The Patriots are a bit banged up at the moment, but it hasn't stopped them from rolling. That means the team could continue to be cautious with Rob Gronkowski (back/ankle), who's missed two of the last three games and has not looked himself when on the field, and rookie rusher Sony Michel (knee).

New England's chosen to go in an unorthodox direction with Michel sidelined the last two games, opting to use WR Cordarrelle Patterson as the primary ballcarrier. James White continues to see a heavy workload, but with the majority of the touches coming through the air. That's left Patterson as the between-the-tackles option, and his combination of speed and size has caused issues for defenders. He posted over 60 yards and a touchdown on 11 carries against the Packers on Sunday night. With the bye approaching, the Patriots might want to give Michel and Gronk more rest (even if they suit up), meaning we could see more of Patterson pounding the rock.

Pats are dominant entering their bye week

Here's a stat for you, courtesy of oddsshark: In their last nine games before a bye week, the Patriots are 9-0 with an average margin of victory of more than 22 points.

The Titans struggle to score, averaging just 16.75 points per game, even after posting their high mark of the year last week. Meanwhile, the Patriots are averaging 35.5 points during their six-game run, while the defense has caught on of late — allowing just 23 total points in the last two victories combined.

HARPER IN BOSTON? NEVER SAY NEVER

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter @dannypicard

Allow me to make a case for Bryce Harper in Boston.

That's right, I said it. Harper with the Red Sox.

As MLB free agency has begun, it was reported this week that the 26-year-old Harper turned down a 10-year, $300 million deal with the Washington Nationals late last season. That shouldn't come as a surprise, seeing that Scott Boras is his agent. But even if Boras wasn't his agent, it only makes sense for Harper to test the free-agent market and see what's out there.

That market will consist of the big-spenders, of course. Teams like the Los Angeles Dodgers, the Chicago Cubs, the New

Bryce Harper of the Washington Nationals. SCOTT DRAETZ/GETTY IMAGES

York Yankees and, well, yes, the Boston Red Sox.

The knee-jerk response to this would be, "Where's he going to play, and how are you going to afford both Harper and Mookie Betts?"

Betts made $10.5 million in 2018 and is arbitration-eligible through the 2020 season. So the Red Sox don't have to lock him up to a long-term deal just yet. Also, if Betts was smart, he'd wait it out just like Harper, because who knows what type of money will be thrown around in the winter of 2020-21.

As for where Harper would play in Boston, there'd obviously have to be a corresponding move somewhere. And that somewhere could be trading Jackie Bradley Jr. and moving Betts to center field, allowing Harper to play his in regular right-field spot.

The timing for a Bradley Jr. trade couldn't make more sense. He'll turn 29 in April. He has one year of arbitration left on his deal before becoming a free agent next winter. He won the ALCS MVP this past postseason, and with Boras as an agent, he'll probably be looking for more money than the Red Sox will pay him into his 30s.

President of baseball operations Dave Dombrowski has no choice but to look ahead, beyond the 2019 season, because there are plenty of decisions to be made. Like Bradley Jr., Chris Sale will also be a free agent next winter, as will Xander Bogaerts. And if J.D. Martinez hits 40 home runs again next season, he has the ability to opt out of his five-year, $110 million deal next winter and look for a higher annual salary.

It's quite possible that the Red Sox could look like a completely different team in 2020. Making moves right now in order to sign Harper this winter would make any upcoming roster subtractions much less painful.

But let's say Dombrowski wanted to really get nuts this winter and free up some money, not only for Harper but also for Sale, Bogaerts, and eventually, Betts. He could trade David Price, who — much like Bradley Jr. — will never have higher trade value than he does right now.

Price is 33 and should've been named the World Series MVP. He has the ability to opt out of his seven-year, $217 million contract this winter, but said he will not exercise that option. But what if he changes his mind once the champagne dries? Would the Red Sox be stuck with an unhappy Price making $31 million a season for four more seasons into his mid-30s?

In his postgame press conference after the Red Sox won the World Series a week and a half ago, Price said he holds the trump card now. Well, not really. He doesn't have a no-trade clause, and if the Red Sox were ever going to move him, now would be the time.

Maybe they could package him with Bradley Jr. somehow. It would make signing Harper a whole lot easier, that's for sure.

And if the Red Sox haven't at least thought of ways to make a Harper signing work, they're not doing their job.

MetroBet sports betting advice for NFL Week 10

New England Patriots (-6.5) at Tennessee Titans

The Patriots are a half-point away from having covered in six straight games, but Tennessee represents their toughest road test of the season to date. Rookie head coach Mike Vrabel deserves a lot of credit for the Titans' 28-14 win on Monday night over the Cowboys. His team looked considerably more polished than Dallas off their respective bye weeks. Now Tennessee returns home, where they've covered in five of their last six. They also tend to play up to their competition, as they're 10-3 in their last 13 against the spread vs. a team with a winning record, per Covers.com.

The Titans have the top-ranked defense in the NFL (17.62 points per game allowed), and Tom Brady may be without Rob Gronkowski once more. New England's offense has been middle-of-the-pack away from home this year, ranking 14th in points per game and 25th in yards per play. Their underrated defense (11th in points per game allowed) may keep Tennessee and their inconsistent offense from engineering the upset, but the Titans should keep this one close.

The pick: Titans +6.5

Buffalo Bills at New York Jets (-7.5)

In a year where offenses have been more potent than ever, the Jets and the Bills are failing to ride the wave. Buffalo is dead last in points per game (10.67) and hasn't scored more than 13 since Week 3, while New York has gone three straight without topping 20 points. The betting total (37) tells you all you need to know about the quarterbacking on these two clubs.

Hold your nose and take Buffalo to cover.

The pick: Bills +7.5

Dallas Cowboys at Philadelphia Eagles (-6.5)

The Eagles should be polished and ready to go against the Cowboys off their bye week, but one would have expected Dallas to play better than they did at home off their bye week with new perimeter weapon Amari Cooper.

All signs are pointing toward the Under (43) in this game. Dallas' defense is third by points per game allowed and fifth by yards per play. The Eagles' defense is fifth by points per game allowed and, most importantly when facing Ezekiel Elliott and the Cowboys, second in the NFL at stopping the run. The total has gone under in 13 of the last 17 Cowboys games, including five of their last seven on the road, and the under has prevailed in seven of the last 10 meetings between these two teams.

Furthermore, eight of the last nine Eagles home games have gone under

Tom Brady and Bill Belichick are on the same page heading into Week 10. GETTY IMAGES

(average combined score of 31.89, per oddsshark.com). Carson Wentz's crew may emerge victorious, but with points looking like they'll be at a premium, take the Cowboys to cover and strongly consider betting the Under.

The pick: Cowboys +6.5
